road in the north, the Stendal-Magdeburg road in the east, the Magdeburg-Haldensleben road in the south and the Haldensleben-Buelstringen-Flechtingen-Calvoerde-Gardelegen road in the west. All roads from Gardelegen were blocked by barriers which were guarded by Soviet soldiers and Volkspolizei. Residents of Gardelegen were not allowed to leave the town. Residents of the surrounding villages were not allowed to work on their fields and were restricted to their houses after 6 p.m. On 22 September, noise of battle was heard in Gardelegen from the near vicinity of the town; it decreased gradually until 27 September, fading away in an easterly direction toward the Elbe River and ended on 28 September. [REDACTED] the problem of the exercise was to stop an enemy attacking from the west at the Elbe River.³

1. [REDACTED] Comment. Except for the transfer of the air force soldiers, the occupation of the Fliegerhorst Kaserne and the Remonteschule remained unchanged until 2 October, according to another report [REDACTED] of mid-September 1952. [REDACTED]

2. [REDACTED] Comment. At least 10 of the troop trains being unloaded at Gardelegen during the period between 19 and 21 September observed by source carried troop units which participated in the fall maneuvers of the Third Shock Army. According to motor vehicles and weapons observed, the following units were unloaded: Between 8:45 and 10 a.m. on 19 September, units of the IX Mtz Rifle Corps, including units of the 94th Gds Mtz Rifle Div. At 5:20 p.m. on 19 September and at 1 p.m. on 20 September, presumably units of the 65th Mort Brig (US) of the 6th Arty Div. At 2 p.m. on 20 September, units of the 3d Gds AAA Div. At 2:30 p.m. on 21 September, engineer units of the Third Shock Army, probably of the 348th Engr Bn of the 18th Mecz Div; and, in the evening hours on 21 September, possibly tank units of the 74th (Hv?) Tank SP Regt of the 94th Gds Mtz Rifle Div.

These movements were previously reported [REDACTED] with two reports from the Magdeburg railroad district giving the most detailed information.

[REDACTED] Information contained in the reference reports indicates the following unloadings during the period from 19 to 21 September:

24 troop trains at Gardelegen, 8 at Jaevonitz, and 2 at Solpke on 15 September, with no information available on Uchtspringe. This information does not check with data given in paragraph 4 of the present report.

3. [REDACTED] Comment. The information contained in paragraph 5 confirms and supplements previous information on the fall maneuvers of the Third Shock Army which took place in and east of the Letzling Heath area between 22 and 30 September 1952. The maneuvers involved major components of the IV Arty Corps and the air force. The borders of the maneuver area west of the Elbe River reported by source and the observations made in connection with the maneuvers indicate that the enemy groups attacked eastward with the objective to force their way across the Elbe River. This assumption was confirmed by observations made in the Lahlwinkel-Bittkau area in late September, where exercises on the Elbe River took place. Therefore, it is believed that the defending troop units were on the west side of the Elbe River until the termination of the maneuvers, and did not start on the east side as was assumed previously. This tends to discredit the previous assumption that the maneuvers consisted of several practice phases and tends to indicate that in the course of the scheduled exercises the operations shifted from west to east. This hypothesis and the statements [REDACTED] are supported by the information on the detraining stations of the elements which participated in the maneuvers. While these stations were located in the north section and northwest section of Letzling Heath, a considerable number of the units involved was entrained at stations in the southeast and east section of Letzling Heath upon termination of the maneuvers.
